FOREWORD

Although the examination of occupations from a personal and social standpoint is not new, interest in this field has been increasing in recent years, partly in response to the rapid changes taking place in the occupational make-up of the Nation's work force. Also, the war on poverty has focused new attention on the significance of such factors as role expectations and status levels in connection with work.

This bibliography was prepared by Robert P. Overs and Elizabeth C. Deutsch of Vocational Guidance and Rehabilitation Services. It is reproduced and distributed by the Office of Manpower, Automation and Training, Manpower Administration, with permission of the authors, as part of its program of disseminating a wide range of manpower information and research findings. Specific endorsement of the content of the bibliography by the Manpower Administration is not necessarily implied.

For those studies indicated by asterisks, abstracts have been prepared under a research contract with OMAT. These abstracts are available at the depository libraries subscribing to the Library of Congress' Documents Expediting Service. A list of these libraries is included at the end of this bibliography.
